Old and New Hymns in General Use in the Churches

ORIGIN OF SOME OF THE FAVORITES

A Decided Improvement in Public Taste in the Last Half-Century -Grotesque Lines Mingle with the Beautiful.

It may be only another example of the persistent self-repetition of history, says the New York Tribune, that on Easter morning of the year 1901 English versions of at least three of the mediawal hymns, which fifty years ago might very well have been regarded as musty rubbish of the churches in this newest of Christian lands. is said to have turned into Greek lambics write verses without the help of wine: shall tell" is the work of that same Venantius Portunatus who more than fifteen cen- At any rate, there is no particularly docturies ago composed the original of "The trinal significance to excuse this royal banners forward go," and sang it from between the bars of the prison into which the secular arm had thrown him for his uncompromising adherence to the church's "Come, ye faithful, raise the strain of triumphant gladness" is entered in the Episcopal hymnal as from a Greek original tongue, the savior's battle" is from a Latin "Pance lingua" of the thirteenth-and a close translation, too, following the rhythm of its original foot for foot, as does "The Royal Banners."

How much the taste of congregations has changed in these latter days may best be realized by first considering the literary character of two other favorites of the present time and then taking a glance at the vagaries of thirty or forty years ago. Everybody, almost, nowadays knows "Lead, kindly light," but in the year 1870, may, it was seidem sung in churches outside of its author's own communion. Again, Baring-Gould's processional, "Onward, Christian Gory to the bleeding Lamb! soldiers, marching as to war," is, in the opinion of one who has daily experience to guide him, more often sung both in church and in Sunday school than any other. These two examples are taken for the special reason that they are to be found in the Episcopalian Hymnal and the last edition of "Gospel Hymns," which is in
